

eComm Support - Germany Return Policy

Policy Version: 2026.1 | Effective Date: 1 January 2026 | Country: DE

1. Purpose and Scope

This policy defines the standard return, refund, exchange, and damaged-item rules for purchases made through the eComm Support online store in Germany. It applies to consumer purchases unless a product-specific warranty, statutory right, or separate contractual term provides a more favorable remedy.

2. Standard Returns

Most unused products may be returned within 30 calendar days from the date of delivery. Products should be returned with the original accessories, manuals, and packaging where reasonably possible. A missing outer shipping carton does not automatically make a return ineligible.

If a customer simply changes their mind, the product must not show signs of misuse beyond what is reasonably necessary to inspect the product. Returned items may be inspected before a refund is approved.

3. Damaged or Defective Products

If a product arrives damaged, is defective on arrival, or becomes unusable due to a manufacturing defect, the customer should contact support as soon as reasonably possible. Reports made within 14 calendar days of delivery will be handled under the expedited damaged-item process.

For damage reported after 14 days, the applicable remedy depends on the standard return window, statutory consumer rights, and any active extended warranty or protection plan purchased for the item. Support may request photos, diagnostic information, or other evidence before approving a replacement, repair, or refund.

4. Electronics and Opened Products

Opened electronics can still be eligible for return within the standard return period if the product has only been inspected or tested in a reasonable manner. Products showing accidental damage, misuse, unauthorized modification, or missing critical components may be excluded from the standard change-of-mind return process.

Where an electronics product is defective rather than merely unwanted, warranty and statutory remedies may apply even when the standard change-of-mind return window has expired.

5. Extended Warranty and Protection Plans

An extended warranty or protection plan does not automatically extend the standard 30-day change-of-mind return period. Instead, it provides additional remedies for covered faults or damage after the standard return period has ended.

If a customer has an active extended warranty, support must first confirm the specific plan purchased and its validity period. Coverage may include repair, replacement, or other remedies depending on the applicable warranty terms. The exact coverage rules must be read together with the customer's purchased plan.

Example: a damaged laptop reported 45 days after delivery is outside the standard 30-day return window. If the customer has an active extended warranty, the item may still qualify for a repair, replacement, or another remedy under the warranty terms, but a standard return is not automatically guaranteed.

6. Non-Returnable or Restricted Items

Certain goods may be restricted from change-of-mind returns for hygiene, licensing, personalization, or regulatory reasons. Examples can include personalized products, activated digital licenses, and certain sealed hygiene-sensitive goods once opened. This restriction does not remove statutory rights relating to defective products.

7. Refund Method and Timing

Approved refunds are normally issued to the original payment method. Refund processing generally begins after the returned item has been received and, where necessary, inspected. Customers should allow up to 10 business days after approval for the refund to appear, depending on the payment provider.

8. Return Shipping

For eligible damaged or defective products, eComm Support will normally provide a prepaid return method. For change-of-mind returns, return shipping charges may be the customer's responsibility unless otherwise stated during the return process.

9. Missing Packaging or Accessories

Missing original packaging does not by itself make a defective-product claim invalid. However, where accessories or components that were supplied with the product are missing, the available remedy may be adjusted where legally permitted. For standard change-of-mind returns, customers should return all supplied accessories where reasonably possible.

10. Exceptions and Escalation

If the standard return policy, warranty terms, and statutory rights appear to conflict, the customer should not be denied automatically. The case must be escalated for review using the most favorable applicable legal or contractual remedy. Support agents must not invent policy exceptions that are not supported by the applicable policy or warranty terms.
